In a commendable act of community support, Annington has recently donated £500 to the York Foodbank, a lifeline for individuals and families experiencing hardship in the city. This donation comes at a crucial time when many in the UK are facing financial difficulties, with one in five people currently living below the poverty line.

York Foodbank's Impact

The York Foodbank has been working tirelessly to provide essential food packages to those in need. Over the past year, the foodbank has supplied an impressive 8,123 three-day emergency food parcels to individuals and families in crisis. On a weekly basis, they support between 100 and 150 people, ensuring that no one goes hungry in their community.

Adam Raffell, the Manager of York Foodbank, highlighted the growing challenges faced by many families. He stated, "The cost-of-living crisis has left many people struggling to cover even the essential costs of keeping a roof over their heads, the electricity on, and food on the table." He emphasised that financial support, like the donation from Annington, is vital during such tough times.

"A lifeline for many local families"

The donation from Annington is particularly significant as it comes at a time when food donations have seen a decline. Many households are finding it increasingly difficult to contribute, which makes financial assistance even more critical. Raffell expressed gratitude for the support from local businesses:

"Financial support like this has never been more important and we are very grateful to companies like Annington for their help."

Stacy Whitehead, the Marketing Manager at Annington, echoed the importance of the foodbank's work:
